Farmer Joe And The Music Show by Tony Mitton

A Fun Story With Exceptionally Fine Drawings

Down on the farm of Poor Old Joe, the hens won't lay and the crops won't grow.

With the help of his instrument playing friends, Farmer Joe soon has the hens clucking, the pigs hoofing, and the cows mooing to a hillbilly music show. And now, ...down on the farm of Clever Old Joe, the hens all lay and the crops all grow.

My Personal Review:
Farmer Joe was having a bit of trouble because the hens stopped laying, the cows weren't grazing, the pigs were off their feed and he was upset because he just couldn't figure out what was going on. Pretty soon a light bulb went off in his head and he thought that a bit of music will cheer them all up and everything would be back to normal. Farmer Joe might have been a dog, but had a few tricks up his sleeves. "Pluck-pluck, plick-plick, diddle-i-oh."

"The creatures caper---look at them go--to the thrill of the hillbilly music show. They jump and jive. They leap and bound. They love the rhythm of the country sound."

He was just getting started, but things were looking up when the hens started to flap their wings to the music. Pretty soon Fox joined in with his fiddle and Rabbit started to play her concertina. Whoa, here comes Bear "with a double bass. Things were starting to get very lively on the farm!

This is one of those rare books that will engage the reader from the first page to the last. This very rhythmical story and the art work mesh perfectly to create one of those timeless tales that will be read and recited time and time again. This vibrant and lively tale, read by someone with an enthusiastic voice, will appeal to one or one hundred children (and the reader too!). Get ready to get those feet a tappin' and get ready to sing, because this book is just the thing!
