For the first time, Wen Ho Lee speaks out: about his work at Los Alamos and his experiences with the FBI, about his arrest and imprisonment. In January of 1999, the arrest of Wen Ho Lee, the Los Alamos scientist who was falsely accused of espionage by the U.S. government and imprisoned without trial, sparked controversy throughout the country. Throughout the ordeal, Wen Ho Lee quietly and steadfastly maintained his innocence. Now he tells his story. A riveting account about prejudice, fear, suspicion and courageMy Country Versus Me offers at last a clear and truthful look at one of the great miscarriages of justice of our time.
My Country Versus Me: The First-Hand Account By the Los Alamos Scientist Who Was Falsely Accused of Being a Spy by Wen Ho Lee

Notice the reviews. Everyone gives it four or five stars except one or two people. People like Gregory Moss below. He states:

"This book is a self-serving woe-is-me diatribe against the US government because it dared to charge a non-white individual with the crime of espionage...Lee downloaded all kinds of classified data onto his home computer, a huge no-no for anyone working with sensitive data."

Actually, no, he didn't. John Deutch, the Director of the CIA did this, but Wen Ho Lee did not. Nor was he (Wen Ho Lee) ever charged with that. That wasn't even remotely what happened, which proves Gregory Moss has never read this book nor is he even vaguely familiar with the case.

Wen Ho Lee was initially accused of leaking W88 warhead secrets to the PRC (Red Chinese). The FBI encountered a problem when they realized Wen Ho Lee never knew anything about the W88. There was a problem: during the Clinton administration Hazel O'Leary felt the security restrictions at Los Alamos National Labs made people without high security clearance feel like second class citizens, so she created a new security classification and made all the security passes the same color. Also during that time Clinton was being hammered with receiving all those illegal campaign contributions from China, so he had to act like he was hard on them.

Hence, Wen Ho Lee was framed by the FBI. The FBI lied in open court to judges and was made to admit to that. The FBI, DOJ, and DOE continually lied during the investigation, to the press and to Congress and to the courts. Congress embellished their own tales, i.e. Specter added to the lies on his own. When Wen Ho Lee was released, after serving nine months in solitary, the federal judge apologized to him on behalf of the United States, and directly blamed--and singled out one by one--President Bill Clinton, Vice President Al Gore, Attorney General Janet Reno, and Energy Secretary Bill Richardson, among others.

During Wen Ho's incarceration Clinton publicly castigated him. After Wen Ho was released as free man Clinton said that he was never convinced of Wen Ho's guilt.
