Reality Stranger Than Fiction? Yes.

A TRUE ODYSSEY OF LOVE AND EVIL

My Personal Review:
No spoilers

You've heard that reality can often be stranger (and more interesting) that fiction. In the case of Serpentine, nothing could be more true. This true crime story, which reads like the best fiction crime adventure book you've ever read, tells the story of Charles Sobhraj and his journey from a troubling childhood (to say the least), through his extensive criminal exploits, to his eventual downfall. Thompson does a great job of telling the stories of all the victims/accomplices involved completely independent of one another, only to gradually bring them together, with lives and destinies clashing together by the end.

Charles Sohraj was a fascinating criminal who paired the tools of deception and charm to get what he needed to survive. Despite his extensive criminal resume, he must at least be given credit for his intelligence and creativity in avoiding the simultaneous pursuit of law enforcement agencies all across Asia.

To sum it up, this is a fascinating account of a fascinating criminal and I promise that you will forget that this isn't a novel, even though it reads just like one. Pick this up and you will not regret it.
