In the summer of 1955, fourteen-year-old Clement enters a general store in Money, Mississippi to purchase a soda. Unaware of the consequences of flouting the rules governing black-white relations in the South, this Chicago native defies tradition, by laying a dime on the counter and turns to depart. Miss Cuthbert, the store attendant, demands that he place the money in her hand, but he refuses, declaring, I aint no slave! and exits with a sense of entitlement unknown to black people at the time. His behavior results in his brutal murder. This event sparks a war in Money, forcing the black community to galvanize its strength in pursuit of equality.

Personal Review: The Sacred Place by Daniel Black
I couldn't put this book down, it is beautifully written. Daniel Black has the ability to touch your heart & soul in his writting. I loved the characters in this book especially Miss Mary. I am not African American but I am a human being who felt the heartbreak & indignity that my fellow human beings lived during those troubled times. It's still not a perfect world but thank God that times have changed. I can't wait to read Mr. Black's other novels.
